What Do You Know About Texas?

Not much, probably, nor do we know it as well as we should. We have made some thirty trips to the Pan Handle, and have a fair knowledge of that section of the country and its resources. We should, however, like to interest you in taking a trip of inspection to that marvelously fine country.

In our judgment it has as great a variety of resources as any state of the Union, to which it was admitted in 1845. It has a history, and its tardy development is due to several causes which we cannot here explain for none of which the land itself is to blame. There a man can engage in a greater variety of gainful agricultural pursuits, than in any country we can name. He can handle to good advantage all kinds of Stock; he can raise grains of every variety that can be grown in Iowa or Illinois, and at least three extremely productive crops, that cannot be raised in either of them, to wit:

ALFALFA, KAFFIR CORN and MILO MAIZE

It is a good fruit country. The laws are favorable to the common people and well enforced. We believe it an ideal country in which to acquire a home. Join one of our personally conducted excursions and judge it for yourself.
